Mr. Forbes explains that the great star beneath | + ola marks as near as possible the spot upon which the autocrat fell. As the deposed Bonaparte lies under the dome of the Invalides, in Paris, so rises in Rome a dome over the place where another, if not 4 a greater, conqueror was extinguished. Pompey's statue, at the foot of which great Caesar fell, a colossal, not ungainly igure of a man, is believed generally to be now standing in the Palazzo Spada alla Regola, in the Piazza di Capo di Ferro. It is placed in what is called the council chamber of the palace, and what are said to be the stains of great Caesar's blood are, according to tradition, still visible upon the calf of Pompey's left leg. Mr. Hare quotes Suctonius as narrating that the statue was removed from the Curia by Augustus, and placed upon a marble Janus in front Mrs. William Reinkin has been the guest of the basilica," and the same authority-of Mr. and Mrs. J. If Keats and Scott and Goethe are so honored by the municipality of Rome, why should not the homes of the men of earlier times have some mark to distinguish their occupancy? Very few spots in the world are more im-

CHIVALRY AND MATRIMONY.

Some Time-Honored Notions of the Olden, Golden Days.

New York Herald. We all want to consider the days of chivalry as the golden days-never to be reiled-for womankind. This is by implicati n a rank injustice to our own time, With all its fine expressions of ardent devotion to the fair sex and the multitude of its exquisite pretensions, chivalry was the degradation of the highest and tenderest human instincts-the veritable curse of the ccurse of true love. Such a statment presents itself to the romantic believer as a terrible counterblast, but it is true, never-For the benefit of Thomas Shaw, who has theless. The records of the treasury and comings, provide the fullest proof. Chivalry did not make marriages, at least in the sense of those born of love's young dream; it entirely ignored all sexual affecnight. Refreshments were served, and an | tions, and sold its victims with ruthless indifference to all mutuality. There were not two parties to its bargains; there was only one, who was always the third of the group and the one interested, not in satisor baron. But whichever he was, he was matrimonial transactions of chivalry were mercenary. To them there were no "contracting parties" in the shape of whispering lovers, ardent swains and coy maidens. On the other hand, there was but sullen, indifferent or hating compliance. Chivalry canted about its faith in women and the purity of its own motives, because it could not sing of love-it may be said that it so canted because it knew it must cant. It knew that its marriages had not been made in heaven and of ethereal sentiment. They were coarsely bargained for, either in Mrs. Orville O. Carvin left yesterday for ketplace. Chivalry knew itself as a social the king's exchequer or in the open marfalsity and the parent of lust. As a consequence the "lower orders" have had to give ter's hand; but he has no picture of the gratified tendencies of longing youth. In his surroundings it was not suffered to exist. These surroundings had no terms to enumerate the ardent swains and coy maidens of rusticity. But if the aristocracy can produce no one instance of the coy maiden, and the rustic sweetheart remains to mock the dubious fiancee, it has a wealth of the arts of diplomacy, and an inexhaustible list of the terms of intrigue. Chivalry gave expression to the word maitresse, which may have, and had, the funniest of mean-
